

Geng Wang, CEO & Co-founder of Civic Champs, started the business in April 2019. Civic Champs makes it easy for nonprofit organizations to recruit, engage, and retain their volunteers. The technology eliminates manual data entry and other time-intensive tasks so nonprofits can focus on doing what matters most. Geng is a proud husband, father, and Asian American business owner. Geng grew up in Vermillion, South Dakota.

He attended Michigan State University where he got a dual degree in Supply Chain Management and International Relations (where he met his wife, Stephanie). He then continued that education further when he got his Master of Business Administration from Harvard Business School.

Professionally, Geng started his career in Pittsburgh through consulting at McKinsey & Company, and later becoming the founder of two technology startups, Rent Jungle (an apartment search engine) and Community Elf (a social media management agency), both of which have been acquired. Geng now lives in Indiana with wife and two boys (Marcus and Mason) and is a returning tennis player. You can also find him on Chess.com struggling to keep up with his kids.
